

How to Embed a Document in Your Blog

Scribd is a popular social publishing website where anyone in the world can publish their documents.

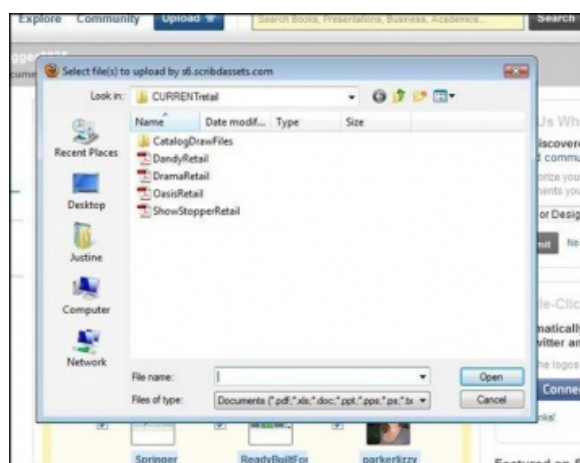

Step 1: Sign Up

Go to Scribd and sign up so you can upload your first document.

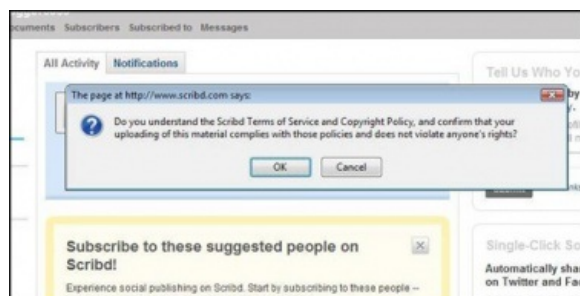

Step 2: On Dashboard, Click UPLOAD

Once you sign up (it's super quick) you will be redirected to your new dashboard page where you can upload your first document. Click upload.

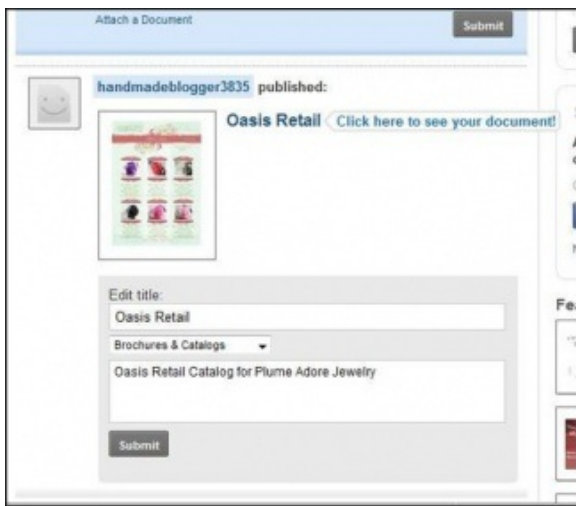

Step 3: Find your file

In this case, I am uploading a retail catalog of a past jewelry collection. Once you locate the file of choice, select and click open.

Step 4: Important Note

Make sure you are abiding by Scribd's terms and copyright rules, which include not sharing files that do not belong to you. I created this PDF, so I'm going to hit OK.

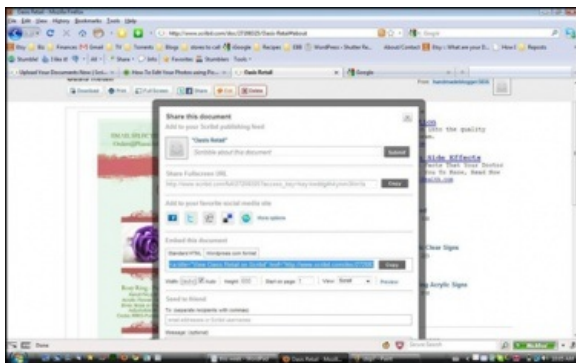

Step 5: Jazz it Up

Your document can be viewed by anyone on the site, so you can make your title and description more snazzy by editing it after it's been uploaded. When you are finished, select "click here to view document".

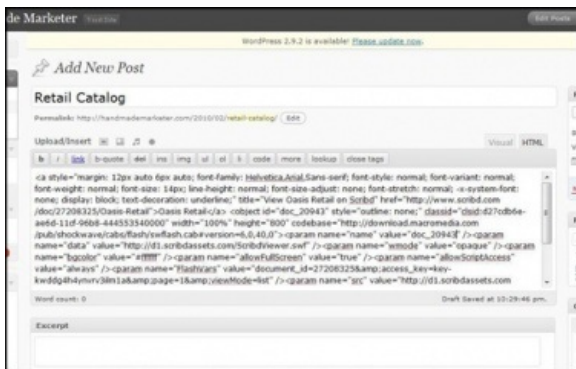

Step 6: Click on Share

Directly beneath your title you will see a few different options, such as print, download and full screen. To embed your document, click the Share button.

Step 7: Copy the Code

Scroll down to 'Embed this Document' and once you have selected the appropriate settings, copy the html code. You will now go to your website or blog and decide where you will want to embed your document. For instance, you could publish it through a blog post, on the home page or create a brand new page (such as 'retail catalog') specifically for its viewing.

Step 8: Almost done!

I've chosen to publish my document within a blog post. I clicked on new post, selected the HTML tab and pasted my code into the appropriate area. The last step is to publish your page/post!

That's it! Have fun and good luck!
